Asphalt Angels

James Watt invented the term horsepower as a marketing ploy for his engines. The formula for Horespower is: 1 HP = power needed to lift 550 lbs. 1 foot in the air in 1 second. Although many scientists agree his estimates of horsepower were overrated, the term stuck and his engine led to the first steam engine locomotive in 1804.

Beer and engines go way back. Before it reached locomotives or cars, one of the first steam engines was put to use on a barley mill at Whitbread brewery in England. It increased production by over 50 percent.
